1145-1315	PLENARY SESSION 1 Investing in social services fit for the future There are a range of different challenges facing social services in the next years, when populations are expected to become older. There is an increasing need to address chronic diseases, morbidity, and long-term care. People with long-term care needs face additional barriers to find and retain employment and meaningfully participate in society. Whilst these challenges become increasingly important, public social

services have been facing additional constraints due to the economic crisis. Therefore, the need for evidence-based decision-making is crucial. Maria José Sanchez Rubio (Minister for Equality and Social Policies in Andalucía, Spain) will showcase social policies implemented in the region inspired by a social investment approach. Jeane Freeman (Minister for Social Security) will introduce Scotland's new social security system proposals to assess the impact of austerity on the most vulnerable. Dietmar Gutschmidt will explain how job centres have become a services hub to support people with complex needs. Finally, Amalia Zepou (Vice-Mayor of Athens) will present local innovative approaches in social policies empowering communities and citizens in one of the countries most hit by the economic crisis.

Moderator:

Alfonso Lara Montero, Chief Executive, European Social Network

1000-1130	PLENARY SESSION 2  Social investment: working in partnership, promoting human capital Investing in human capital is key to build more resilient societies. Social services have a key role to play, in partnership with other key public services such as housing, health, education and employment. This session will present different examples on different forms of human capital investment and their outcomes. Christian Bodewig will bring the perspective of the World Bank on how social services can respond to future challenges of automation and increased use of technology in the labour market by reinforcing links with education and health services. Next, Lucia Dal Negro (Founder of De-Lab, an international consultancy) will present the inclusive business approach and how this model, originally created within the development aid sector, can open new scenarios in western societies by enabling vulnerable people to design and create services that activates and empowers them and their communities. Andrés Ramos Vázquez will then provide a specific example of how the ONCE Foundation is helping people with disabilities integrate in the labour market in Spain. Finally, Raf Manji (Councillor in Christchurch, New Zealand) will introduce how the universal basic income can be an efficient tool to address poverty and open up new forms of social contracts impacting social services. Moderator:  Katrina Sichel, Wit and Word Communications, Moderators for Europe Responding to technological change: investing in social services fit for the future  Christian Bodewig, Programme Leader, World Bank An inclusive approach for meaningful participation in society  Lucia Dal Negro, Founder and Director, De Lab - Solutions about inclusive business, Italy A partnership approach to support people with disabilities find and retain employment  Andrés Ramos Vázquez, Deputy Director General of Social Services for ONCE Foundation Affiliates, Spain Something for Nothing? 1430-1600	PLENARY SESSION 3 Social investment: investing in social infrastructure, public services, impact investing and new care models Social investment is key to transforming public social services and people's lives. This approach can bring a shift in the way social policies and services are conceived with an additional focus on prevention. Social investment represents a revolution in the way public services are delivered and an opportunity to use investment to change lives for the better. This session will open with the presentation of major findings from a report on investing in social infrastructure in Europe, presented by Lieve Fransen (Member of the High-Level Task Force for Investment in Social Infrastructure). Herminia Palacio (Vice-Mayor of NYC) will

present their investment programmes in health and social services across New York City. Next, Kevin Goldberg (Groupe SOS) will present two projects supported by social impact bonds in France targeting single-parents households and the unemployed. Finally, Mayte Sancho (Matia Foundation) will place an emphasis on how quality management and public procurement based on evidence can impact services quality.
